From One to Many: The Multiplication Effect in Action at TICC 2026

As Margaret Mead observed, a small group of committed individuals can indeed influence change. What makes that change sustainable, however, is how it spreads—through visibility, trust, and participation. Across the world, many community-led initiatives have demonstrated that progress often begins with small, consistent actions that inspire others to step forward. Each act of participation encourages another, gradually building the momentum needed for meaningful transformation.

In regions such as Louisiana, community-based efforts that emerged in response to local challenges—particularly in the aftermath of environmental and social disruptions—have shown how grassroots collaboration can grow over time. What began as small groups of volunteers coming together to support their communities evolved into organized networks, expanding their reach through shared purpose and collective effort. These initiatives did not rely on formal recruitment alone; rather, they grew as more individuals recognized their impact and chose to contribute.

This pattern of organic growth reflects a broader truth: lasting movements are not built overnight, but through continuous engagement, shared responsibility, and a willingness to act. As TICC 2026 brings together participants from diverse contexts, it builds on this same principle—where each contribution, no matter how small, becomes part of a larger journey toward collective resilience and meaningful change.

Why This Theme?

Local Wisdom, Global Influence
Meaningful HUMANs for Resilient Glocal Communities

Persistent inequalities continue to divide our world, yet in every community, powerful stories of altruism emerge to unite us. These selfless individuals and their dreams for others remain a true beacon of hope.

With the United Nations declaring 2026 the International Year of Volunteers for Sustainable Development, Let Us Dream's Triennial International Community Conference returns with a call to reimagine a fairer future. The theme "Local Wisdom, Global Influence" places indigenous perspectives at the centre of meaningful change, embodying LUD's vision of renewed HUMANity (Harmony, Unity, Mindfulness, and Action for Nurturing) cultivated through volunteerism across youth and communities worldwide.

Our most meaningful solutions grow from collective effort, local in their roots and global in their reach. This "Glocal" spirit takes centre stage at TICC 2026, celebrating empathy, empowerment, and the shared inspiration that emerges when diverse community experiences connect.

TICC 2026 brings together 50+ speakers from 10+ countries, representing 25+ higher education institutions and 50+ community partners across three thematic days: Education, Health, and Social Issues. Designed and facilitated entirely by young volunteers, the conference is a storytelling platform for dreamers and doers across generations and geographies.

The LUD Community Conference is FREE, and this is a call to keep it that way. Your participation and community outreach is the celebration.

Empathy and Empowerment: Insights from Premanjali

During our first pre-conference workshop for LUD's TICC 2026, we visited Premanjali Educational Trust, a Pune-based nonprofit founded in 1988 that supports children through education, mentoring, and community programs like Shaale, Antardrishti, Saniha, and Prasada. Running on roughly a crore a year through partnerships and volunteer effort, the organization struck us most for what it didn't do: none of its stories asked for pity. Every story centered ability, not need. A retired bank manager named Ms. Rama, who now spends her time reading to visually impaired students and pushing them to think bigger, became a quiet symbol of that shift. So did the students themselves, competing nationally in sport and using technology tools like NVDA, MANI, Lazarillo, and Envision AI to move through the world independently.

We walked away with one line that reframed the whole day: don't visit once, come back, hire our students, create opportunities. That challenge became our real takeaway, that development means expanding capability rather than dispensing welfare, and that real inclusion doesn't need a big budget, just a mindset shift from asking what people need to asking what opportunities we're creating for them.

Voices from the community

What almost stopped you from showing up or joining LUD for the first time?

One of the biggest things that almost stopped me from joining LUD was the uncertainty I felt about working with children. As a mentor in DIP, I knew I would be interacting with and guiding children directly, but I wasn't confident in my ability to do that. I wasn't sure how to approach them, communicate with them, or be an effective mentor. Since I knew our interactions could have a real impact on their lives, I was afraid of getting it wrong. However, taking that first step turned out to be one of the most rewarding experiences, helping me grow in confidence and learn so much along the way.

For the conference, there was nothing that was stopping me as I knew some people in the team and I knew they would be great mentors to me and saw it as a learning and networking opportunity.

Quiz: Retrace the Dream

Every past edition of LUD's newsletters left something behind, a quote, a fact, an idea. This quiz brings a few of them back. Some questions test memory. Others ask what's stayed with you.
